Each year approximately 1 in 5 children is sexually solicited online.¹

The Internet is an invaluable tool, but there are serious dangers that need to be discussed.

Online sexual predators: They can be anyone. The Internet allows people to remain anonymous and does not prevent adults from lying about their age or intentions.

Online sexual solicitation: Unprovoked, uninvited, or unwanted requests to engage in sexual activities, engage in sexually explicit conversations, or give personal sexual information.

It's important to educate your children and teach them how to better protect themselves. The best way to help protect your children is by being involved and talking to them. Feel free to use the acronym quiz on the front as a starting point.

How to help protect your children's online life

- Prepare your children for the online world just as you would for the real world.
 - Establish guidelines and rules.
 - Know who communicates with your children.
- Learn about the Internet.
 - Familiarize yourself with the programs your children are using.
 - Consider using Internet filters or blocks.
- Place the family's computer in a common room, where supervision and guidelines are met.
- Limiting your child's computer time is not enough to safeguard your child on the Internet. Talking about the benefits and dangers on the Internet and making sure your children are making smart decisions while online is also important.
- Explain to your children that instant messaging (IM) is only for chatting with school and family friends they know by face and are approved by you.
 - Go over your children's IM "buddy list" with them. Make sure they can put a face to every screen name on the list.

- 65% of incidents happen in chatrooms.²

- Tell them not to say anything in a chatroom that they wouldn't say in public.
- Reinforce that people are not always who they say they are when they chat online.
- Make sure your children know how dangerous it is to give out personal information such as their name, mailing address, or E-mail address.
- Stress the fact that it is not safe to get together with someone they first "meet" online.

What to do if you notice a problem

- Be sensitive to any changes in your child's behavior or attitude.
- Be on the lookout for unknown telephone numbers on your bill or your child's cellular telephone bill and unexplained gifts your child has received.
- Show concern, listen compassionately, and remain calm if your children share any distressing incidents they have encountered while online.
- Don't judge your children or threaten to remove their Internet privileges.
- Use the incident to discuss safety rules and reinforce the fact that people are not always who they seem to be online.

HELP DELETE ONLINE PREDATORS

Report any disturbing incidents by giving the screen name or E-mail address and any other information known about the online sexual predator to your Internet Service Provider, local law enforcement, and the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children's CyberTipline.com.

The majority of children who use the Internet do not get into serious trouble. The Internet is a wonderful tool, but like anything else, you need to be careful.

To learn more about Internet guidelines please read Teen Safety on the Information Highway, also available online at cybertipline.com or by calling 1-800-THE-LOST (1-800-843-5678).

¹According to David Finkelhor, Kimberly J. Mitchell, and Janis Wolak in Online Victimization: A Report on the Nation's Youth, Alexandria, Virginia: National Center for Missing & Exploited Children, June 2000, page ix, approximately 1 in 5 children aged 10 to 17 who used the Internet regularly in 1999 received a sexual solicitation or approach over the Internet in that year.
